Lengthy treatment periods cause many clients to exhaust all available income, savings and family support. Hear what our clients and supporters have to say:

“Since I was diagnosed with breast cancer last year, I’ve been too sick to work. My husband’s income from the military hasn’t been enough to pay our bills. CSFI is the only organization that would pay for my car insurance. When I’m well enough, I want to volunteer for CSFI, because no other organization is providing these kinds of services for cancer patients.”

Catherine

“I was homeless with two kids, living in a car. CSFI provided money to help me get into another apartment. Now my kids and I have a home.”

Linda

“In my work as a patient resource navigator in a hospital setting, it’s wonderful to have CSFI providing help in the community. Cancer patients just can’t do it all by themselves. Cindy always follows through and looks at all the options available to her clients. She really comes up with innovative solutions to tough problems.”

Stacey

“As a result of CSFI’s intervention, my eviction was placed on hold and I was able to keep my utilities on. They also got a pharmaceutical company to provide the medications. They were there for me to talk to every step of the way. My health is much better now.”

Sheila

“I am a cancer survivor who works at a hospital advocating for those in treatment. I call CSFI when people have financial needs that no one else will meet. Cindy responds immediately and is usually able to help. In one case, she was able to get donations for Christmas presents for a single mother and her three children, which helped make their holiday special.”
